

Simplifying a Complex Product Announcement

With Spok Care Connect

The Problem

In healthcare, when you streamline processes, you maximize efficiencies and deliver better results.

Does the same hold true in communications? If you streamline the information-sharing process and maximize your reach, will you deliver better results?

The Business Wire Interactive Media Team did exactly that for Spok with the launch of their new integrated healthcare communication platform, Spok Care Connect.

Spok Care Connect is a first-of-its-kind, cloud-native enterprise communication platform designed to make care collaboration easier by connecting important care team and patient information into messaging and alerting applications, streamlining communication and letting clinicians focus on what they do best—taking care of patients.

The goal of this launch was straight-forward. Spok wanted to build awareness for the new platform, increase news release views, and drive longer content engagement and inbound traffic. Spok had a new product to launch, but—without a tangible object to show—needed a new way to let local and global audiences engage with their news.

The Solution

To support the launch, the Spok team created a series of strong supporting elements, including a product video and annotated images. Spok then turned to the Business Wire team to take the announcement to the next level, combining all of the platform's media assets into an interactive media piece that lets people virtually engage with the product, educating audiences in the most efficient manner possible.

At launch, the news release and interactive assets were distributed across Business Wire's national circuit, to editors covering the HIMSS Global Conference & Exhibition [Healthcare Information and Management Systems Society] and into the hands of consumers.

Once live, Spok's interactive content launch piece featured a base image that used a continual pulsing motion to attract readers' attention. Each time a reader touched a hotspot, a new content piece surfaced to them. The combination of motion and smart content kept readers interested and moving through the Spok marketing funnel.

By placing the entire journey into one media element, Spok audiences were able to learn everything possible about their new platform, without ever leaving the interactive asset. By replacing traditional media with interactive media, Spok streamlined their learning process, maximizing results through efficiency.
